The correspondent of the News says:

The "Journal" would have us believe the success of the words to express his feelings. Democratic party was not due to the Mountain District and to Mr. Clingman's influence; as Mr. Dockery gained a few comparatively no-votes in that district. Let's see .-Dockery, just as Scott did two year s ago, was going to the curred there-said they - Scott has carried the Stateof the "Journal" as his paper will show, were strained in to be that direction; anxiety was in his heart and anxiety plainly discernible in his editorials; and hope, to dispel it from both places, was to come from the mountains. It came Scott was defeated—it came; Dockery was defeated.

He then proceeds to expatiate, with a pleasure which sounds strangely from a Democrat, upon our loss at the last Governor's election, in this County, which he puts down, with a liberal hand, at about four hundred, being a slight exaggeration of about one hundred. We would beg to call the attention of this enthusiastic correspondent back to the dull routine of facts, and request his attention to one or two which an analysis of the official vote will show, namely-that General Dockery made a gain in the Mountain District of between five and six hundredthat this was above his average gain throughout the State-that even this District, over which this "East ern Man" appears so much to rejoice, shows only a loss of between six and seven hundred, a mere trifle greater than that in the Mountain District. There is certainly something amusing in the closing sentences of the quotation we have made-"It came; Scott was defeated-it came ; Dockery was defeated." If we might do so without impertinence, we would beg leave to ask how Dockery was defeated by obtaining an increased majority of between five and six hundred votes? We make this enquiry without wishing to reflect in any way upon our brethren of the Mountains. The Democrats there did their duty, and are entitled to full credit with their brethren in the other districts, but not above or to the exclusion of all others.

We are free to say that we think it eminently unsafe to look to any extraneous influences, for the sources of Democratic strength, and we also sincerely believe that the majorities for Mr. Bragg, as well as for General Pierce, would have been very largely increased had the Democracy of the East been fully awakened to the necessity of exertion, instead of success being lulled into a false security by rumors of some mysterious and semi-miraculous changes to be brought about in the Mountains, which, some how or other, were to "save the State."
